Good Morning I.S.201! This is Amelia Tuzzolino of class 731 speaking to you for today's on behalf of the S.E.A.L Team!

Did you know that today is National Comic Book Day! Comic books aren't just about superheroes fighting villains, they're about storytelling, creativity, and learning that even the smallest person can do something big. Think about Spider-Man's famous saying, "With great power comes great responsibility." That means we should be using our voices and actions in a positive way like helping a classmate and showing respect to others.

What kind of hero will you be today? Maybe you'll be the friend who stands up for someone, or the student who encourages others to try their best. Remember, our everyday choices are what make us real-life heroes.

Like Jane Addams, today's affirmation is: "I serve others with compassion, and I can lead by caring and sharing."

Before I go, I want to remind you that your homeroom teacher has received a key template. We hope you finish the key to success task by October 7th so we can celebrate your work on a bulletin board.

Thanks for listening and have a True Hero Thursday 😊
